The plan does not contemplate the expenditure of a large sum of money for the construction of golf courses, but whenever the ground is available somewhere or in the hands of private owners, the Signal will endeavor to have the local War Association, or the local War Signal, stand the cost of the service to men who are deterred, either by illness or by the numerous duties devolved

ALL-RUSSIAN ARMY FORMING.

Government Locates Seat with that of Siberia.
Gen. Boldyreff Appointed Chief of Military.
Treasury Instituted and Taxes Being Collected.

(BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.)
WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Further success of the all-Russian government and the government of the north at Archangel in their efforts to raise armies to oppose the Bolsheviks and German forces is reported in cablegrams received by the Russian Embassy, a summary of which was published recently.

The all-Russian government, on invitation of the Siberian government, has transferred its official seat to Omsk, where the already organized governmental institutions of the Siberian government are put at the disposal of the all-Russian government.

Opinion is united, the cablegram said, as to the urgency of arming the new national forces. The mobilization of the classes of 1918 and 1919 has been completed, and Gen. Boldyreff has been appointed commander-in-chief of all the Russian forces.

The Czechoslovak Gen. Syrovny is commander-in-chief at the front, with Gen. Diterichs as his chief of staff, while the Czechoslovak Gen. Chechek commands the southern army and Gen. Gayda the northern army.

To finance the government and the army, the messages said, a treasury has been instituted at Omsk, and taxes are being levied, the government endeavoring to refrain by all means from issuing valueless paper money.

Regarding the military situation, the message said Samara had to be abandoned owing to the offensive of the enemy and to the revolt of the local Bolsheviks.

On the Ural front the enemy is retreating, and successful operations are taking place in the regions of the rivers Tagil and Kungur.

To the south the front borders the Kama to Chistopol, then continues toward Samara and further to Orenburg.

Col. Douvour of the General Staff has been appointed commander-in-chief of all forces of the northern region, and Gen. Admiral Viktor commander of naval forces of the Arctic Ocean.

SETTLES IT.

People must put off their kissing until the influenza epidemic is abated. This ought to wind it up in a hurry.

PEP AND PATRIOTISM.

The little mountain town of Tujunga, just a handful of people of small means, subscribed $4540 to the Fourth Liberty Loan. The amount given them to raise was $2500, so they have oversubscribed their quota just 118 per cent.

SHOWING THE SHOE.

Fashion announcements are that the dames will be wearing the long hobbled skirts this winter. Just when the women were going strong in their $15 shoes they begin to hide them.

FOR OUR COUNTRY.

Gov. Stephens has issued a proclamation urging all people of the State to combat the spread of influenza, as a war measure. Of course, we will all do our very darndest—as a war measure!

HA, HAI FRANCES F. X. BUSHMAN!

If the Mayor makes us wear flu masks we have one consolation, anyhow; it will be the democratization of pulchritude. When you get one of those things on the loveliest matinee here alive will look just as homely as the rest of us. Come on wit' ver masks.

EVERYBODY WANTS IT.

If these Minora hens could get a real squirt at the wheat crop it might loosen up the egg market a little. Since wheat has been on the blacklist as poultry fodder it has been hard for the chicken fancier to find the proper diet to encourage the egg-laying propensities of his birds.

GUN IN HAND.

No use in talking peace with a German while he has a gun in his hand. Whenever an American sees a Heine with a shooting iron he should plug him and take it away from him no matter if he is in Berlin. A German has no business to be entrusted with artillery and any peace that leaves the Germans in possession of the tools of war is a peace written in water. A bright little note: "See our Mr. Foch" would be a fit finale to this letter writing industry that has suddenly developed.

A PAINFUL SHOCK.

What a painful shock it must be to Mad Bill when they bring him the morning paper at Potsdam and he reads the further exploits of the four leading American "aces." Our four leading flyers who, between them, have brought down more than fifty German planes during the last six weeks, are all of German descent and have names of unmistakable German origin, as witness, Lieut. Rickenbacker, twenty victories; Lieut. Luke, whose father was born in Germany, fourteen planes and balloons; Lieut. Wehrner, ten planes and balloons; Lieut. Meisner, nine planes. And Bill predicted eighteen months ago that the German-Americans would refuse to fight against the fatherland.

THEY MADE GOOD.

One of the surprises to the Allies is that the American nation is not beside itself bragging about the heroism and fighting qualities of its troops at the front. This is gathered from reports sent back to their countries by prominent Allies who are at present sojourning here. The bragging of Americans before this war was always a subject of at least mild ridicule and oftentimes the sneer. In fact it was quite an indoor sport to encourage tall stories from Americans and to have a proper repressed enjoyment of them afterwards.

It never occurs to many that there is a difference between bragging and having it in you to make good and bragging where it implies that there is a yellow streak somewhere around. In reality the bragging spirit in us which designers were inclined to criticize was a superficial outpouring of our animal and mental spirits, and basically was a deep-rooted conviction of optimism for anything American—we may have shown it noisily, but it was naive. This love and enthusiasm that a people have for everything pertaining to their country is commendable, and our way of expressing it may suggest the spread eagle and may be sometimes tactlessly inappropriate, but it is not so sure but that from its honesty it may be better than that method of repression wherein one is so wrapped up in the solemn assurance that all things pertaining to his country are true and cannot be gained, that he meets your criticism with a pained and quiescent superiority and an air of just enduring you.

The American people have been wonderfully glad and genuinely proud of the work of their boys, but they took it as a matter of course.

ADJOURN POLITICS UNTIL AFTER THE WAR.

President Wilson has issued an appeal to all voters to elect Congress men who will support the present administration in its war policies. With that appeal The Times, in conjunction with all other loyal Republicans, is in perfect accord. If a slacker were running on the Republican ticket, the Republican National Committee would be the first to expose him. The slacker was all exposed, in fact, during the primaries and beaten.

If the President were to point to a single candidate on the Republican ticket and say "That man is not in sympathy with the administration war programme," the country would rise as a whole and demand that the accused be beaten.

Before the August primaries President Wilson asked that there be a truce to partisan politics to the extent that the administration should be assured of an undivided support. That truce the Republican leaders welcomed. They have observed it loyally. In more than forty Congressional districts in the nation the Republican voters, acting on the advice of their National Committee, made no nomination for Congress or in-different were Democrats who had supported the war policy of the administration in the present Congress.

Republicans are, first of all, Americans. They will support the President in every policy calculated to force the war to an early and victorious conclusion. But they will not forget that the President's record on certain great economic and industrial policies is not in conformity with the principles and traditions of the Republican party.

In a letter to the Democratic National Committee yesterday the President expressed a fear that the election of a Republican Congress might be taken by our Allies as a repudiation of his war policies. The country has no such fear and our Allies know too well the martial record of the Republican party to have to fear from a Republican Congress. Germany spent millions in propaganda to defeat the Republican party in 1918 because it was feared as a war party. If the Grand Old Party were to be returned to power in the present Congress it would be taken by the whole world outside as a final declaration that the American people were in the war with every one of their objectives would be won.

President Wilson admirably and frankly says:

The leaders of the minority [Republicans] in the present Congress have unquestionably been pro-war.

When the President adds, "But they have been anti-administration," he is attempting a distinction which the country will regret that he sought to make. The Republican party has never caused a false ideal to be incorporated in the laws of the nation. Its leaders have supported loyally the President's war programme; but they have opposed such of his economic policies as would open the American markets to the products of pauper labor of Europe.

The Republican leaders will oppose with the utmost vigor any attempt to include a free trade plank in the international treaty which will mark the victorious close of the present conflict. And The Times believes that their attitude will be that of the great majority of loyal Americans.

President Wilson was re-elected, not because he was a Democrat, but because he was at the head of a government during one of the most critical periods in its history. He received more than 100,000 Republican votes in California; but it was not for the Democrat that they voted. Republicans but they will not elect representatives who are unsound on the question of adequate protection for American labor and American industries, whether they be Republican or Democrat.

From the day war was declared The Times has supported with every ounce of vigor it possessed the war policies of President Wilson and his administration. It has supported the President when, for diplomatic reasons, his intent was obscure; supported him when many of the leaders of his own party were voicing their disapproval. But the President himself must be aware that some of his economic policies are in conflict with the vital principles and traditions of the Republican party. If we were to give lip fealty to these we would be guilty of a hypocrisy which even a state of war does not justify.

Not since the memorable campaign of 1864 has such grave importance attached to a Republican vote in either house of Congress. American ideas and traditions are at stake. The history of the Republican party is that of the growth and progress of the great American republic. Old leaders have passed and new ones have taken their places; defeats have been endured and victories have been won. But the ideals on which Lincoln founded the great party that banished slavery and economic servitude forever from the American soil are immutable.

In this critical year the balance of power in the country between the two great political parties is fairly equally divided. The administration is Democratic, but the country is Republican. A single vote in Congress may decide questions vital to the prosperity and integrity of the nation.

After President Wilson had asked the country to adjourn partisan politics until after the war, and after that request was fully granted by the Republican leaders, to the extent that they caused the endorsement of more than forty incumbent Democratic Congressmen, his action in asking all voters to support only Democrats in the Congressional primaries is indefensible.

His attitude places the Republicans in Congress who have supported the war loyally, with his own party was divided, in a position that is extremely embarrassing.

Politics seem to be adjourned by all save Mr. Wilson.

SCISSORS CHAMPION.

Jess Willard is also willing to do his bit. He passes from counting the money he gains as an oil magnate to announce his willingness to box somebody four rounds for the benefit of the army athletic funds. As a fighting man and all round battler Jess Willard is one of the best little coupon-cutters that ever left a manicure parlor. It might be a good idea to dig up Ad Wolfst and feed him to Jess before Lydia Pinkham gets him. Jess Willard is just like the late John L. Sullivan—he's so different.

PRECAUTION AND FEAR.

At the present moment it takes a level head to draw the line sharply between fear and precaution. Yet precaution is the child of wisdom, while fear is born of ignorance and weakness. It belongs to every man and woman in this country today to exercise due precaution with regard to the prevalent epidemic—to recognize that we are afflicted with unusual and dangerous conditions and to religiously observe every rule and suggestion made by accredited authorities, local, State or national, for the preservation and maintenance of health.

At the same time, the individual who gives way to fear, who tries every remedy retailed by his neighbor, the papers or the druggists and who goes about, or who stays at home, in dread of the moment when he shall show symptoms of the disease is creating the necessary conditions for the disease. While the average mind refuses to believe that mind is all and that sickness is solely of the mind—it is undeniably true that fear and constant dwelling on the possibilities of contagion prepare the system for trouble. To an extent we do invite disaster by holding it in our thoughts and we prevent ill by forgetting it—after we have made all the possible provisions for avoiding it.

If the wearing of "flu" masks is decided by the health authorities to be a wise precaution, let's wear 'em—although they are disgusting to our beauty and uncomfortable. But don't let the presence of the mask scare us into the belief that we are going to catch the germs, even when masked. And don't let anybody expect to have a turn at influenza—keep the subject as far as possible and go about the regular routine of life, as nearly as the prohibitions of the health authorities permit. If you can't do your usual work there are plenty of other things to do. The call for workers for the Red Cross, the draft boards and the government is urgent.

If you do begin to sniffle and snuffle get to your doctor at once, and stand not on the order of your getting—it's a lot easier to head off the "flu" at the start than it is to cure it when it's once well under way. If everybody will exercise common sense, obey orders and refuse to be stampeded by fear, this invasion of a foreign germ will soon die out and we shall go back to the normal course of our own brands of colds and grippe. The fear of the future illness largely preventable by right living and proper precautions—as a habit, instead of an emergency measure. If we were as afraid of our ordinary disease conditions as we are of this extraordinary pestilence they might prove just as dangerous. Certainly the sense of fear has had a good deal to do with the distribution and fatality of the "Spanish influenza" while the general observance of reasonable precautions and absence of panicky fears will do much to overcome it.

WHAT AN ARMISTICE MEANS.

Germany's request of the Allied governments, through President Wilson, for "the immediate conclusion of an armistice on land and water and in the air" has awakened a lively discussion in the English and French press as to the literal meaning of the word "armistice." Some of the newspaper strategists who permit their passions to influence their judgment and understanding have gone to the extreme of claiming that an armistice is an acknowledgment by one of the belligerents that he is beaten and a request to know the terms under which he may escape further punishment. Frank H. Simonds is a notable instance. In an article written for the New York Tribune and published under contract by a number of other papers, Mr. Simonds avers that an armistice is "purely and simply an inquiry of a beaten contestant. It is in substance a statement by the enemy: 'I have been beaten; what must I do to escape further thrashing?' Above all else an armistice is not a truce."

While such an interpretation of the term is flattering to the Allies, there is nothing in the standard dictionaries of the English and French languages to justify such a definition. The word has been taken into the English language from the French; neither the spelling nor the meaning has been changed. The same root is to be found in the Spanish, Portuguese and Italian languages. It is derived from the Latin word arms (arms) and status (p.p. of sto, stand). The French dictionaries give to it a single meaning, without qualification, "momentary suspension of hostilities by mutual accord." Standard English and American dictionaries define the word as "a temporary cessation of hostilities, by mutual agreement, between two armies in the field or between nations at war; a truce; no recognized authority in either the English or French language have been able to find that the term armistice implies aught concerning the relative condition of the military forces engaged. What was termed in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, "The truce of God" by English writers was called the "armistice de Dieu" by the French. Until the word armistice became current in the English language it was translated by using the term truce.

Modern usage has made a shaded distinction, however, between the two terms. A truce has been adapted to mean a cessation of hostilities of a more temporary nature and for a shorter length of time than an armistice. In his introduction to his International Law, Woolsey observes that "an armistice is an interval in war and supposes a return to it." An armistice again leaves the question of war unsettled. There may be some significance in the fact that the German government used the French term armistice rather than the English term truce in the wording of the note.

There is nothing in an armistice implying that hostilities shall not be continued. An armistice is often asked by military commanders in the field. The request is but rarely made by one government of another. An armistice may be asked to permit both sides to bury their dead and collect their wounded in No Man's Land, or to arrange for the removal of unconquered cities from a beleaguered city. As Woolsey recites, an armistice presupposes a continuation of hostilities.

Under the French interpretation of an armistice it can either be general or local in its nature and can be concluded either by the governments or by the military authorities. Notwithstanding the armistice, the belligerents continue the administration of the countries that they occupy. The penalty for violating the armistice is death, or in case of extenuating circumstances, penal servitude.

While the tenor of the German note would indicate that the armistice is sought as a means to obtaining permanent peace, it is not so nominated in the bond. The note begins, "The German government requests the President of the United States to take in hand the restoration of peace." Germany does not seem to be aware that such was the intent of the President when he dispatched some 2,000,000 fighting men to France. The American idea of securing a durable and lasting peace is fighting for it. In the book of the American diplomacy there is no such thing as a peace of conversation. The United States has never compromised a war nor compromised a principle, and it is not apparent that an armistice would aid us in obtaining our objectives. The time for an armistice will come after our objectives have all been won.

The daily story of the casualties of the war now covers a page in the newspapers. It means sorrow in thousands of American homes. It tells in words most eloquent what the manhood of America is doing to redeem the civilized world from Kaiserism. These lives have been offered as a willing and eager sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

The Allied troops appear to have done some fine open work in the Valenciennes district.

OLD-AGE EFFICIENCY.

BY GEORGE FAWCETT.

October the second was the birthday of both Foch and Hindenburg. The coincidence of this was enough to attract the attention of many. But that these men, the dominant, adversary brains of this world war, were old men creates more than a ripple of interest. That all the men who are at the throttle of events in this, the world's greatest epic, are men approaching three scores, and some over it, gives additional impetus to the thought we turn the searchlight on the subtle question of what is a man's best age for efficiency.

A few years ago a man famed in medical science gave an embarrassing notoriety to a remark given in the lighter vein in one of his lectures that when it was a question of efficiency all people should be changed at 40 years of age. Carnegie, in the heyday of his business career, made it a rule that all men beginning work in his organization should file their resignations and all the progressive men of this time seemingly took their cue from him, for it was a rule very much in evidence that men over 40 might "get the sack" at any time. It all goes to show that we have not made much effort to standardize this efficiency of man, which certainly has its high and low-water marks.

Barrie, with certain freakish, intuitive tendencies, or the quirk or twist in youthful brains which causes the abnormal development called genius, all work improves with healthy age.

There are certain forms of subjective work where the mellowness of age give it flavor, where a slackening of the vigor in us sometimes gives more perspective. Just as there is other work where the vital and red blood of maturity is a necessity and gives the work or achievement its punch in the arms men have been at their best at different stages of their age.

Sometimes a man's talent has been like a lead in a mine. He works it with vigor and energy. Some men develop early and never grows more. The best in physical nature grows to maturity, but the best in man grows all the time, although toward the last it is at the expense of the vital and with it a purely sublime light is thrown on subjective work. Of course, it is the little man that is the engine of the "doer." That is, the man of action.

With the creator, higher creation comes, for the most part, when the virile is under dominance. That can come at any age.

Environment has so much to do with what you do. One will thrive in one atmosphere and wilt in another. Many men have found themselves at 50 by being thrust into another environment, whereas they were before, what they had in themselves was stultified.

With opportunity it is the same. Who would ever have heard of Foch and Hindenburg if the Kaiser had decided to delay the world's war until 1925? Habit, too, wraps its insidious and sticky tentacles about us and soothes us into desuetude. There are dominant and masterly figures in affairs now who have lost the art of manual effort. They dictate to aides—they even direct the telephone. These men, with all their ability, if placed suddenly in work of direct elementary action, would be inefficient—at least they would be clumsy.

All this is why old age has been dubbed inefficient. Clever men who deal in the abstract soon lose the knack of working in the objective. When you talk to them they start as though from a dream. When their work is in the realm of abstract they are efficient. Place them where they have to cogitate and they fumble. To make men of all ages efficient is the great new study called in particular cases a new war Occupational Therapy. This work will be extended. There is an efficiency in every age of every man—we must find it.

A Way Better Than Reprisal. It has been suggested that "reprisals in kind" be made for the wanton burning of French and Belgian cities and the destruction of property by the retreating Germans. This is a better way than reprisal. When the time comes, cities in Germany might be occupied by Allied forces until the wilful damage done by the Germans is paid for. Full restitution is impossible. Some of the things that have been destroyed cannot be restored or properly paid for, and some of the destruction may have to be charged to the necessary wastage of war, but the cost of restoration of the burned cities and the lands laid waste can be estimated and the amount can be assessed upon the cities of Germany and these cities can be held in trust, as it were, by the armies until the assessments are paid.

This course would be neither barbarous nor unjust. It destroys nothing and wastes nothing. It simply charges the loss against those who are responsible for it and who caused the larger part of it through a barbarous spirit and in haste and vindictiveness. The punishment proposed would be in a measure fit the crime, although it would be inadequate. Moreover, for every thousand peaceful Belgians or French marched off to slavery an equal number of Germans should be compelled to work on the restitutions.—[Hartford Courant.]

THE ONLY PEACE FOR GERMANY.

"Germany," said Senator Thomas, "takes a lot of arrogant nonsense about her peace, the German peace, but in the end there will be only one peace for Germany and that is the peace of defeat." The peace table looks beautifully spread with colonies and indemnities and Atlantic ports, but in the end she will be like the man who said to his guest: "Will you have a little of this cold veal, or—"
